

MILLARD THE JUNGLE BULLY

Written & illustrated by Summer Faye Butler

Once upon a time there was an elephant named Millard. He always bullied all the other jungle animals. One morning, in the jungle, Millard was making fun of Harry the rabbit. Saying he was small and had long ears. Harry the rabbit didn't feel very good when Millard bullied him. Harry started to cry and hopped to tell his parents.

Later that day, in the nest, Millard bullied his best friend, Kiki the bird about her loud tweeting. Kiki was very surprised that her best friend was bullying her. Kiki also told her parents on Millard. Her parents thought it was very unacceptable for Millard to bully a girl. Kiki's parents got mad and tried to put a stop to the bullying, but it didn't work. Millard bullied Kiki's parents too.

That evening, in the grass, Millard bullied Charlie the snake. Saying he had no legs or arms. Charlie the snake felt sad and couldn't believe that Millard would hurt his feelings so badly. Charlie slithered to tell his aunt what had happened. She said to just stand up for your self. Charlie tried but it didn't work. Millard just kept on bullying all the animals.

Ha Ha
Ha!

The next day, Millard was bullying Stewart the lion. Millard said that the mane around Stewart's face made him look funny. This made Stewart feel really sad.

At lunch time, Millard started bullying Arthur the monkey. Millard was laughing at the yellow banana's that Arthur was eating for lunch. Saying his long tail looks funny when he swings from the trees.

Arthur had enough of all this bullying. He gathered all the animals to come up with a plan to teach Millard a lesson. The plan was to sneak into Millard's house that night and put a mouse in his bed. When Millard woke up he was so frightened he was making noises and stomping his feet with his eyes wide open. Millard learned his lesson and apologized to all the jungle animals he had bullied. Everybody in the jungle became friends again and played everyday.

